

ABSTRACT

An improved pet food snack and container for holding same and for providing and dispensing a dry pet food snack in combination with a highly palatable paste or sauce is provided. The container houses separate first and second pet foods. The container has a removable lid that automatically places the first and second pet foods into contact when the lid is removed. The container has a bowl that holds the contacted first and second pet foods. The bowl is suitable for serving the contacted first and second pet foods to a pet. A pet owner can open the container and serve the contacted first and second pet foods without using any separate utensils.
